Last December and January, community members and leaders came together at the Community Extension Center to discuss what they would like to see done in regards to police brutality in the Black community. After months of work addressing the issues that were raised, it is time to reconvene as a collective community to talk about progress and urgent next steps that will occur in the next couple months. A petition that we have filed with the city to institute a Civilian Review Board will be at the forefront of our conversation. There is a lot to talk about and even more to be done—we need all hands on deck!
